Steph & Steve

My husband and I got engaged in October and we decided to quickly get married in January. The most important part of the wedding to me was our photos and who was going to take them. When Erin emailed me back to say she was available and willing to travel to Tofino for us, I was ecstatic. I had seen her work on social media and always admired her style. I knew that we would connect very quickly.

I could go on for a long time with how memorable Erin was as our photographer, however, a few certain moments I will always remember. We only had 27 people attend, and Erin had remembered our immediate families names right away. She was very personable and made our relatives feel very relaxed in front of the camera. It was also a very cold day, but she was able to coordinate everyone for the perfect shots in a very timely manner.

I will also never forget how she was fixing my hair at one point, and then outside fixing the altar the next. I will forever be thankful that she simply told my husband “absolutely not” to a tiki torch arch at the end of the altar (this still makes me laugh every time too). She had suggestions on where to take pictures, what time to do the ceremony for the best light, and many more little details that we would of otherwise missed. She was more than a photographer for us that weekend.

Our wedding was now over a year ago, and I still have people telling me how stunning our wedding photos were all the time. Choosing a photographer you trust to capture your wedding day photos can be quite intimidating, but with Erin I felt none of those feelings at all.

You can feel the love and passion while looking through her photos. When I look at our wedding album under our coffee table, I get all the same goosebumps I had that day. Our photos will be forever cherished, we can't thank you enough Erin ❤️
